398 Fairy tales. Folklore

Bibliography

In this catalog only fairy tales having a foundation in folklore are classed here. Modern fairy tales are classified as fiction. Some libraries prefer to disregard this distinction and class all fairy and folk tales in 398

Folk tales will be found in the Alphabetical list of the Children's Catalog under the subject Folklore, sub-divided by country, as Folklore—Ireland.

Modern fairy tales will be found in the Alphabetical list under the subject Fairy tales

For traditional literature, other than folk tales, see 398.2

398.2 Legends. Sagas

Sagas, romances, legends, ballads in prose form and hero stories are classified together in 398.2, instead of with the literature of the country of origin, in order to keep the traditional material together and make it more readily available to children. The Aeneid, the Iliad and the Odyssey are exceptions to this rule, being classified in 873 and 883

Folk tales are classified in 398

Legends connected with the stories of operas are classified in 782

Myths are classified in 291-293

Baldwin, James, 1841-1925

537 Electricity

It is difficult to draw the line between 621.3, applications of electricity and 537, the theory. Many books take up both. In many libraries, the most satisfactory arrangement would be to combine these classes. In this list, both 537 and 621.3 are used, to agree with the Decimal classification and with the practice in many libraries

591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior

This section includes general books about habits and behavior of animals and books about some individual animals. Most of the books of animal stories are classed in Fiction as they are told in story form; e.g. books by Roberts and Seton. It is difficult to draw the line between books which should go here or in Fiction and some libraries may prefer to put all such books in 591.5

Libraries using 599 may prefer to class the books about the individual mammals there

621.3 Electric engineering

It is difficult to draw the line between 621.3, applications of electricity and 537, the theory. Many books take up both. In many schools, the most satisfactory arrangement would be to combine these classes; and in most cases 537 would probably be the most satisfactory number. In this list, both 537 and 621.3 are used, to agree with the Decimal classification and with the practice in many libraries

916 Africa—Description and travel

There is practically no good up to date material on the countries of Africa at the present time for children. The books included here are on the whole descriptions of manners, social life and customs rather than on industries, or statistical material.
Some of the best material about the life and customs of other countries is found in the fiction about those countries. See the

Out of Print List

The books listed below, because they are out of print, did not receive high enough votes to be included in the Children's Catalog. This list does not include:

1. The books which received very high votes and which were kept in the main body of the Catalog.
2. Out of print editions of titles listed in the Catalog.
3. Titles which would not have been entered in the Catalog even if they had been in print.

It is hoped that this list will be useful for the librarian as an aid to discarding and in second-hand buying.
